

♦ The Letter Laam ?

The Hebrew equivalent of the Arabic Laam is called Lamed and means "ox goad".

During the Age of Taurus the sacred animal symbol was the bovine. Various cultures "worshipped" cows, buffalo, bulls, oxen or steer. But the "worship" was really a symbolic worship, not unlike a good Catholic bowing before a saint or kissing her crucifix necklace. One needs to go deep to get to the energy essence behind the saint or crucifix to discover what, on a Catholic mystical level, was really going on.

Should you peel a layer or two off Catholic saints you'll run smack into African ("voodoo") gods.

If you explore the depths of the Hebrew/Semite gods, spirits and angels you'll once again bump into African gods.

If you explore the Islamic god, it's attributes, the angels and spirits you'll encounter African gods.

If you strip all confusion off Greek, Roman, Sumerian, Babylonian, Mayan, Inca, Aztec, Indian gods you will meet the African gods.

And if you really get into the African gods you will encounter energy gestalts, consciousness aspects and activities and processes in nature from the subatomic particles to humanity to the very cosmos.

A small amount of explanation is in order.

Two of the oldest Hebrew names for the supreme Being were El and Eloah. Yahweh appeared much later. In fact the early Jews had a doctrinal split. Some worshipped Eloah and others worshipped Yahweh (Jah, Jehovah).

When they decided to piece together a scripture -- long after Moses -- they had to choose between 2 different creation stories. The Elohists had one and the Yahvists had a different one.

Some genius decided to mash them both together in sequential Genesis chapters and hope that no-one noticed the conflict.

The Elohist creation myth appears first.

"Let's make man ....." "male and female created he them...."

Then comes an entirely different story. "There was no man to work the field ..." (For whom would the man work the field if no other people were around? Why would there even be a need for tilling ground?)

In the Yahvist myth God scoops up some muddy dirt and makes a dude and calls him Adam.

What scholars of the Hebrew culture ignore is that these opposing deities were actually well-known gods of the African Canaanites among whom the Hebrews (Arabs and Israelites) were a small minority.

All advanced culture gods had complimentary goddesses. Eli's wife, originally, was Eloah. Later, Eloah was depicted as male.

Each god was married to an equally powerful wife.

Divine Unions

God Goddesses

El Eloah
Allah Allat
Osiris Isis
Tehuti Maat
Set Nebt-Het
Baal Ashtenoth

The divine couples depict the yin-yang quality in all things. As the gods were actually energies, all energy has a positive (god) and negative (goddess) polarity.

Together, the deities made up interrelated and interdependent energy systems. Shango, for example, was married to Oya.

Shango, in this case, symbolized the Sun and his wife symbolized Venus. But the Sun symbolized the heart and Venus represented the veins thru which the heart pumped blood. So Shango and Oya were interrelated and interdependent in their functions. No one deity could do it alone.

The Loas

Because the Lord's gonna come tumblin' down
The Lord's gonna come tumblin' down
The Lord's gonna come
He gonna tumble right down

- Ziggy Marly and the Melody Makers

In some African cultures spirits are called loas. Spirit, Loa, diva et al. are ancient equivalents of the modern word "energy." But, unlike modern scientist, the ancients knew that energy and consciousness were aspects of each other. In other words consciousness is inherently energetic and energy is inherently conscious.

Quantum physicists are stumbling upon this reality. Eloah was the Canaanite equivalent of Loa. Because Canaanites are so closely related to Kushites, Mizraimites, Puntites, it is little wonder that they'd have very similar words and concepts.

The offspring of the union of El and Eloah were called the Eloheem (literally, lofty ones).

The Arabians are the interracial children of Europeans (Saracens) and Ethiopians. In fact, the word "Arab" means mixed.

The Arabs naturally partook of the ideas and beliefs of the majority African culture in Arabia just as the Israelites adapted so very much from the Canaanites.

The Arabic equivalent of Eloah was and is Allah. The ancient wife of Allah was Allat.

Have you seen Allat, Aluzzat and the third manat?

- Quran

Allat corresponds to the Moon, Aluzzat to Jupiter and Manat to Venus.

But there was still the problem of the unwed Yah (Jah).

Another genius decided to incorporate Yah into Allah by fusing Al and Yah into Allah. Arabic scholars know that the second "a" in Allah is not a vowel, it's a consonant. It's an Alif. And the consonant Alif is nearly identical to the consonant Ya (Y). And Y's are etymologically close to J's. Instead of Allah being the Yang polarity of the Allah-Allat union, the goddess was banished like Hagar and replaced by yet another male force, Yah.

This is the religious origin of Arab misogyny. Any corruption in the world has its roots in the church, mosque, ashram, temple or synagogue.

In the good old days more spiritual power was vested in priestesses than in priests. So the priests had to knock over the goddesses in order to wrest power from the women.

In India, Brahma (originally female) was marginalized by Brahman (equivalent of Arabic Rahman) and poor Brahman became associated with a bull instead of a cow. This was the work of Aryan invaders and not the original Dravidians of India (so-called Hindu Kush).

Shaddai was a female goddess, not a god. Her name meant "breasted one." She was the same as Isis. The Jews turned her into a male. To justify the breast thing, they fabricated the explanation that Shaddai meant Lord of the Mountain and a mountain was close enough to a breast in appearance.

In the Quran, Shaddai's masculinization is complete. He is there called Shadeed "the Strange One."

Concomitant with the ideological war on goddesses was a physical war on priestesses. A well-known example was the Jewish campaign against priestess Jezebel and her advocacy of the spiritual system of Ashteroth (Isis). They went so far as to call the righteous priestess a whore.

Was Jezebel a Whore?

Well .... Yes!

But What's a Whore?

As nuns are today considered brides of Christ, the priestesses of antiquity were called huwris or wives of Horus/Heru. As Horus was the archetype for light (energy) a huwri was a priestess of light.

Now, as in most things, there is an element of fact in the misogynistic attacks on Jezebel and the goddesses.

Some huwri adepts mastered and taught the sacred tantric sexual sciences. To be a King, priest or leader, a man was expected to have mastered his sexual energy. And who better to instruct and guide young men in sexual cultivation than women who are themselves masters?

Most societal, national, global and individual problems are rooted in misdirected sexual energy. An undeveloped King might launch a destructive war as a substitute for lack of sexual prowess. A weak priest might molest children.

The wise ancients developed advanced systems to assure that people trusted with leadership didn't bring their sexual hang-ups to the job.

Eradication of such hangups was part of the work of huwris.

And huwr-un 'iyn
Like unto hidden pearls
A renewal for what they accomplished

- Quran 56: 22-24

The Kin and other bigshots donated to and funded such temples. And so, to one of limited understanding, it could be said that they paid for sex. And that is equal to saying I paid a man to kick my son when I sent him to martial arts class.

As High Priestess Jezebel was almost assuredly such a huwri. And since the word "whore" is a derivation of Huwri then the words are somewhat accurate, the understanding is not.

If America had such sacred huwri schools they'd have fewer gangbangers and dopeddealers and republicans.

The ancient master scientists knew there were remarkable powers of healing and longevity in the menstrual blood of women. Certain women were selected, cultivated and sanctified so that the essence of their sacred blood could be alchemically mixed to form a special powder, "cakes of the gods," which would both extend the life span and expand the mind.

And when the angels said:
O Mary, surely Allah has chosen you and purified you and chosen you above the women of the nations.

- Quran 3:41

The eating of the wafer at mass -- now called the flesh of Christ -- has its origin in the sacred star fire divine food made of alchemically enhanced menstrual blood.

In some scriptural texts this very special food was simply called "the food."

The Messiah, son of Mary, was nothing but a messenger... And his mother was a sadd-gat [master of words of power].

They both were eaters of the food.

-- Quran 5:75

The word sadd-gat is translated "sincere" or "truthful by translations bereft of esoteric spiritual understanding. In reality it is the Arabic equivalent of the Egyptian maa kheru (true of speech). An initiate was declared maa kheru after he or she had passed the judgement in the Hall of Maat. At that point his or her hekau (words of power) produced effect and was therefore regarded as "true of speech." To achieve such power one has to be sincere and truthful but those are the qualities that qualify a person for sadd-g status, not such status itself.

When the Quran says that Jesus and Mary "became eaters of the food" it is saying that they qualified themselves to each the sacred heavenly food.

This food enabled one to perceive things beyond the usual range of human perception. It was greatly desired by initiates.

And when the huwaarieen said:
"O Jesus, son of Mary, is your Lord able to send down maa-idatan [food] from the sky?" He [Jesus] said:
Fear Allah if you are believers."

The said: "We desire to eat of it, and that our hearts should be at rest, and to know that you have indeed made us masters of words of power [Sadagtana] and that we may be witnesses over it."

Jesus, son of Mary, said: "O Allah, our Lord, send down maa-idatan [food]
to us from the sky to be a festival to the first of us and the last of us and a sign from you. And sustain us and you are the best of sustainers."

-- Quran 5: 112-114

There is so much in the above 3 verses that I felt it necessary to refrain from translating them exactly as they should be translated. It would be equal to teaching relativity to pre-schoolers. The above translation, deprived as it is, surpasses in accuracy any other English translation yet published.

The word for festival ('Iyd-dan) should have been rendered "food of immortality" and "believers" would offend truth less if it were translated "people who have achieved the Amen plane."

But the weight of such accurate translation might bruise psyches that have no foundation to support a heavier understanding.

Indeed, "fear Allah" is a bogus translation of ittaqu. It is a plural imperative verb related to the sublime word tagwa. It is maternally related to the Hebrew word tikun and summons up awareness of karma.

The Quran is replete with highly technical spiritual-scientific terms. Gradually these terms will be explained so that a true reading of the book, perhaps for the first time, will become possible.

"Sky" should've been rendered "asteroid belt," but that might have revealed the location of some elements of the divine food prematurely and a precocious reader may've wondered how such food could make it from the asteroid belt to Palestine.

Indeed my readers may one day indict me for condescension because I translated arzagna "sustain us" when the word, technically, had to do with passing a special energetic substance called rizg-an through a process yogis call shaktipat. The great Egyptians called it the Ari Sa Aungkh and, at lesser levels, adepts can pass life-force energy through their hands into a person's chakras to activate them. My lovely and spectacular wife, Helen, however, is able to send such energy across oceans to those privileged to receive her awesome energies.

Even the word "sign" is badly translated for "miracle" would be closer to the mark.

My readers may perchance deal mercifully with me when they know that, in time, I have every intention of "tearing the roof off the motha" so that every word of religious science is completely and irrefutably explained.

Unless I get a chance to pitch for the Dodgers first. That being unlikely, let's return topic.

Hawaari-iyin is usually translated "disciples" so people erroneously think Jesus was here talking to Peter, Barnabus and fellows of that ilk.

He was not.

Hawaari-yn could be translated "men dressed in white." They were, it seems apparent, members of the famed White Brotherhood.

The hawaari-yn are male huwris, i.e., initiates who were now ready to receive the sacred divine menstrual food.

It is that maa-idatan that the male huwris request. That food, they know, will "rest of hearts."

We again must do a drive by into Egypt and target the Min Ab en Aungkh em Maat or keeping the Heart Stable to Live Truth procedures to apprehend what the men in white were seeking. It is explained a bit more fully in my book The Egyptian of Life.

The men wanted to master the Min Ab to stabilize their hearts and to know that they'd become Saddigs (mantra masters) and through the celestial food, to become witnesses. In other words, they wanted to have their inner senses activated.

The menstrual blood of the huwris was the primary, essential ingredient in the sacred food and such blessed women were called "Scarlet Women." It was an honor even superior to the cardinals red robe (a usurpation of the function of the of the Scarlet Women).

In Greece such women were called "Hiezodulai" or Sacred Women. That word became, in mediaeval French, "harlot." But the Germans called them "hores" and that word became our English "whore."

And We shall mate them with Huwr-in ( iyn

-- Quran 52:20

Another passage connects the huwris with immortality:

And we shall mate them with huwr-in ( iyn.

They call these in for every fruit, faithfully.

They taste not these in death except the first death. And He will gave them from the chastisement of Hell

From Taurus to Aries

During the Age of Taurus the Lamed/Laam symbolized the ox goad. But when the paradigm shifted to the Age of Aries the shepherd's crook became a tool of great symbolic meaning.

The Laam ? depicts a crook and like a shepherd guides his sheep, the spiritual initiate guides his thoughts to their proper objective.

Because thoughts are electromagnetic, undisciplined thinking produces haphazard life events.

Several deities are shown holding crooks to symbolize that the attainment of the level they represent depends upon the gentle direction of thought.

Thoughts, like sheep, follow one another. In addition to the crook, the Laam depicts the path of kundalini from the sex chakra or sea of Chi (at the base of the penis in men). It loops around to pierce the perineum then begins its ascent at the coccyx and travels up to the crown of the head.

The Justice Tarot card is attributed to the Laam or Lamed. This card is further ascribed to Libra.

As Libra represents the scales of balance, the sound of Laam unites the yang (Govenor) channel with the Yon (Functional) channel, thus forming the microcosmic orbit.

To make the "L" sound you must place your tongue on the roof of your mouth. That connects the two channels thus balancing yin and yang in the body.

The Yoga shoulder stand corresponds with the Laam.
